Trump's New Immigration Policy Seeks to Replace Green Cards with 'Build America Visa'

President Donald Trump announced a new immigration reform proposal which, if implemented, would replace the existing green card categories with a new visa, "the Build America visa."

The aim of the new Build America visa, which would dominate the allocation of one million green cards issued every year, would be to give permanent residency to more young, English-proficient, highly skilled immigrants in America, whether they are already living here – as a student or as a worker or from overseas. These immigrants would be selected on a merit-and-points-based system, details of which are awaited. A similar system is already in existence in countries like Canada and Australia.

The new proposal is to implement an immigration system that will allow the citizens to prosper for generations to come. Trump criticized the existing approach to immigration are only allowing for "open borders, lower wages, and, frankly, lawless chaos".

He said: "We are proposing an immigration plan that puts the jobs, wages, and safety of American workers first, adding, "Our proposal is pro-American, pro-immigrant, and pro-worker. It's just common sense. It will help all of our people, including millions of devoted immigrants, to achieve the American Dream."

Trump said that currently, 66 percent of legal immigrants come to America on the basis of "random chance". "They're admitted solely because they have a relative in the United States. Another 21 percent of immigrants are admitted either by random lottery or because they are fortunate enough to be selected for humanitarian relief. Random selection is contrary to American values and blocks out many qualified potential immigrants from around the world who have much to contribute.
